INTRODUCTION

The Tetela people (or Batetela in the plural) are an ethnic group of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, most of whom speak the Otetela. The Tetela is a Bantu language.

The Batetela live in the region between Lusambo and the Upper Congo River, in the provinces of Sankuru and Maniema. They are related to the Kusu people, and only became separate in the late 1800s after the arrival of Arabs and Belgians in the region. Both the Batetela and the Kusu are subgroups of the larger Mongo group. The name Motetela comes from a god named Motetela, meaning either "he who laughs not" or "heat whom one may not laugh. History according to Emil Torday, who studied the tribes of the Congo between 1908 and 1909, the Batetela originated on the right bank of the Lomami River and migrated to their present territory at some unknown date. In 1869-70 their language is called Otetela. (Otetela, Kitetela, Kikitatela), also Sungu, is a Bantu language of northern Kasai-Oriental Province, Democratic Republic of Congo spoken by the Tetela people.

The Batetela live in the area between Lusambo and Upper Congo River, in the provinces of Sankuru and Maniema. It is a little more than that. The territory limits of the Tetela community are defined by influences of the population in a territory. Tetela leaving their ancestral home some settled down in the grass-land of the Lubeufu, others in the forest of the Lukenye River. Some came into contact with the relatively cultured Basongye and Isambo, others with the primitive Bakusu; some were influenced by the Baluba coming from south others by the AKEL, immigrant from the north. Some were conquered by the Arabs and lived for years under their influenced others become soldiers of the white man and benefited by his education. These two latter groups seeing of less interest the anthropologist than to the colonial administrator may be dismissed in a few words. The Batetela soldiers of the Congo state, when they freed themselves of their officers, become the terror of the country and continued so for several years. Allied to the Portuguese slave traders of Angola they practically depopulated large tracts in the south of the Congo state and practiced on the natives such wanton cruelty as is probably unknown in history. It may be said that contact white man and the Arab has brought aut in the Batetela al the savagery of their prehistoric ancestors. Not so when they came into touch with other tribes of their own race then they changed too; many of their ways underwent considerable alteration, but still they continued. It would be difficult to find a people in Africa which would illustrate the effect of such events better than the Batetela.

The Tetela culture, culturally the Tetela lived in the forest and built huts of mud on the wall and that chad with grasses on the roofs. They are the hunter, fish man done by men, while women do farming of cassava, banana and rise, their main stable food is “Oyoko” cooked from cassava, rise “Epunga”

A RESEARCH PROPOSAL FOR COLLECTION OF TETELA PROVERBS

AND WISE SAYINGS

By ELISE META

(Kenya)

INTRODUCTION

The Tetela people (or Batetela in the plural) are an ethnic group of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, most of whom speak the Otetela. The Tetela is a Bantu language.

The Batetela live in the region between Lusambo and the Upper Congo River, in the provinces of Sankuru and Maniema. They are related to the Kusu people, and only became separate in the late 1800s after the arrival of Arabs and Belgians in the region. Both the Batetela and the Kusu are subgroups of the larger Mongo group. The name Motetela comes from a god named Motetela, meaning either "he who laughs not" or "he at whom one may not laugh. History according to Emil Torday, who studied the tribes of the Congo between 1908 and 1909, the Batetela originated on the right bank of the Lomami River and migrated to their present territory at some unknown date. In 1869-70 their language is called Otetela. (Otetela, Kitetela, Kikitetela), also Sungu, is a Bantu language of northern Kasai-Oriental Province, Democratic Republic of Congo spoken by the Tetela people.

The Batetela live in the area between Lusambo and Upper Congo River, in the provinces of Sankuru and Maniema.it is a little more than that. The territory limits of the Tetela community are defined by influences of the population in a territory. Tetela leaving their ancestral home some settled down in the grass-land of the Lubeuf, others in the forest of the Lukenye River. Some came into contact with the relatively cultured Basongye and Isambo, others with the primitive Bakusu; some were influenced by the Baluba coming from south others by the AKEL, immigrant from the north. Some were conquered by the Arabs and lived for years under their influenced others become soldiers of the white man and benefited by his education. These two latter groups seeing of less interest the anthropologist than to the colonial administrator may be dismissed in a few words. The Batetela soldiers of the Congo state, when they freed themselves of their officers, become the terror of the country and continued so for several years. Allied to the Portuguese slave traders of Angola they practically depopulated large tracts in the south of the Congo state and practiced on the natives such wanton cruelty as is probably unknown in history. It may be said that contact white man and the Arab has brought aut in the Batetela al the savagery of their prehistoric ancestors. Not so when they came into touch with other tribes of their own race then they changed too; many of their ways underwent considerable alteration, but still they continued. It would be difficult to find a people in Africa which would illustrate the effect of such events better than the Batetela.

The Tetela culture, culturally the Tetela lived in the forest and built huts of mud on the wall and that chad with grasses on the roofs. They are the hunter, fish man done by men, while women do farming of cassava, banana and rise, their main stable food is “Oyoko” cooked from cassava, rise “Epunga”
